ABSTRACT

When it is determined, as a result of testing or informal diagnosis, that a student is deficient in a particular reading skill, this taxonomy can help teacher and student together to select from a choice of materials, at the appropriate reading level, to correct the deficiency. The taxonomy is divided into five basic categories: beginning reading, phonics, vocabulary, comprehension, and study skills. Appendixes list materials used in the taxonomy according to reference number and provide an index of materials listed in the taxonomy. (HOD)

In answer to an urgently expressed need from high school teachers faced with low reading scores, this classification of remedial reading materials was prepared in 1972, and revised during the summer of 1973, as a function of the New York City Right to Read Impact Project, funded by the United States Office of Education.

Once a student's problem is diagnosed, this taxonomy is designed to help teacher and student together to select from a choice of materials geared to help remedy the particular reading difficulty. Using the model pages, you may want to program in other materials you find useful. Teachers have found it handy to remove the staples and insert the material in a looseleaf binder.

It is the plan to add to and revise this taxonomy periodically. Your additions, modifications, and suggestions are sought.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The planning and design of this guide for the high school reading laboratory was under the direction of Anita Dore, Acting Assistant Director, In Charge of the Bureau of English, and Muriel Mandell, Coordinator, of the New York City Right to Read Impact Project.

Muriel Mandell headed the research committee assisted by Stephen O'Donnell, Catherine Treadwell, Ilah Kelstein, Leonard Jenal and Norman Cohen.

The Right to Read Taxonomy drew from previous compilations directed by Dr. S. Alan Cohen of Ferkauf, Dr. John E. Connelly of the State University College at Fredonia, Edwa Steirnagle of the El Paso Public Schools, and many New York City high school reading teachers, particularly those working in the New York State Urban High School Reading Acceleration Program. In addition, the researchers had access to the Bank of Objectives prepared by the New York State Education Department.

Editorial assistants were Lorraine Kirby, Myrna G. Weiner, and Beverly Weinstein.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

When it is determined, as a result of testing or informal diagnosis, that a student is deficient in a particular skill, this guide will indicate materials, at the appropriate reading level, to remediate the deficiency.

For example, if your student has difficulty in recognizing and identifying main ideas, you will find a variety of materials listed in the materials column, labelled Easy, Medium or Hard under the section on Comprehension, starting on page 81. You and your student can select the ones available in your classroom or school which are the most suitable. Once you have introduced the material and taught the skill, the student can progress on his own, using prepared answer keys to check himself. The teacher will find materials listed for other skills which can be used in like manner.

Materials found particularly useful with students for whom English is a second language are so indicated by an L in both appendices. Many of these supply pictures and/or oral reinforcement of the printed word. In the area of Reading for Pleasure, fiction with a setting familiar to the student, as well as familiar myths, fairy tales, and biographies, set up the fewest barriers to reading progress.

General Material For The Teaching of Phonics

Material	Comments
Vowel Lotto 23, Consonant Lotto 23, Quizmo 5	Games which aid the student in an awareness of vowel and consonant sounds. Need student leader.
Fun with Words, Kits A, B, C 4	Games which use rhyming and initial and final sounds along with context clues to reinforce phonetic knowledge. Need student leader to read cards.
SRA Reading Laboratories 19 Ic, IIb IIc,	Consult teachers' manuals for specific skills, card numbers and grade levels.
Merrill Linguistics Readers A, B, C. 7	Series of readers which use linguistic approach to familiarizing student who is decoding but who is having trouble with sounds to basic consonant and vowel sounds. Must be approached correctly, on one-to-one basis with teacher, or small groups.
Let's Read 8	Programmed reading series which uses phonetic work and drill to help student with consonant and vowel work.
EDL's Aud-x 13	Machine plus tapes which combine visual, auditory and kinesthetic input to reinforce reading concepts. Special tapes on vowel and consonant sounds, etc. and all phonetic areas.
Roberts' Word Attack 24	Good book for teacher interested in teaching phonetic skills. Exercises too remote for direct student use.
Reading Practice Program 95	Units 1 - 4. Kit with pre and post tests.

Given visually an unknownword beginning with a single consonant, student will be able to reproduce the word orally.

How to use this index

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

All materials used in this taxonomy are listed alphabetically below, indexed as to the sections and page numbers under which they may be found. Because most of these materials are referred to by a variety of names, we have tried to list by title only, with two basic exceptions: where the publisher's or author's name is contained in the title (e.g. Merrill Linguistic Readers, Dolch's Consonant Lotto), and where a book or material is part of a series (e.g. Getting the Main Idea, Richard Boning, listed under Specific Skills Series). Materials may appear more than once on any page, or may be listed by their cross references. Therefore, it is recommended that, after consulting the index, the page listed should be looked over completely for additional entries.
